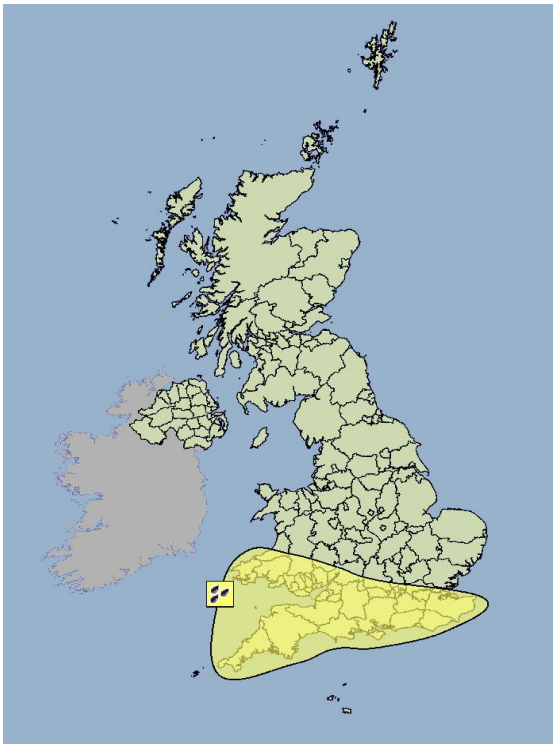
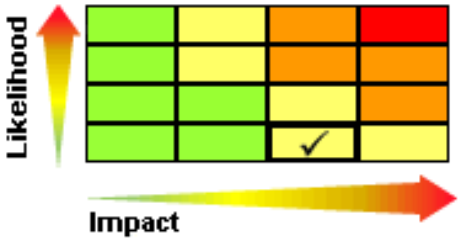
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A frontal zone will bring spells of rain to many areas on Tuesday. Whilst some of the rain will be heavy, rainfall amounts now look less likely to lead to flooding. However, there is now a greater risk of some heavy, thundery downpours breaking out during Tuesday afternoon and evening. Many places will miss these, but where they do occur there is potential for over 25 mm rainfall in a short space of time with an associated risk of surface water flooding, perhaps most likely across southwest England where showers are slower-moving. These may last well into the night before slowly clearing away to the west on Wednesday morning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 09:00 on Tue, 10th May 2016 until 09:00 on Wed, 11th May 2016

Outbreaks of rain, heavy at times, will affect some areas on Tuesday, with an increasing risk of heavy, thundery showers breaking out on Tuesday afternoon and evening - these perhaps lasting overnight into Wednesday.

Please be aware of possible localised surface water flooding where the heaviest rain occurs.

This is an update to the warning originally issued on Monday to include more of southern England; to allow the warning to extend into Wednesday morning; also to change the position in the risk matrix to a very low likelihood of medium impacts.
